IN 2020, EYE SHADOW SALES ARE SOARING

"Eyes are the windows to the soul," is a Biblically old phase, but it's also never been more true than in 2020. Since we rarely leave the house anymore, and a mask covers half our face even when we do, our once-anticipated morning cosmetic routines can feel a bit dissonant, an old habit from a world that no longer exists. Many former makeup lovers told Allure that the pandemic has caused them to ditch their 30-minute makeup routine for something more relaxed. But the eye makeup stays in the picture.

It makes perfect sense. Since we aren't performing for others anymore — coworkers at the office, strangers on the subway — many of us no longer feel obligated to show off bold lips or a perfect highlight. But we can still add color to the one part of our face that remains visible to the outside world. Her eye-makeup ritual serves as a distraction from our grim political climate, a spot of color in a dark world.

It might seem a bit silly that so many of us still want to apply eyeshadow or winged liner when the most glamorous trip we might have planned is the one to the grocery store. But our masks — and, in many ways, our global circumstances — have stripped us of our individuality: We can no longer see our friends, pursue our hobbies, or even showcase our smiles. At least we can paint our eyelids the color of sunshine. A little light, where there once was none.

Love eye shadows!!! And totally agree this year they took a new step with formula, colors and texture.

In my opinion eco-eye shadows are hit this year! What can be better than saving world and looking hot!

Words can't express my obsession with eye shadows, pallets are my weak spot. So many ideas can be express through them, you can use them on so many different ways, not only for eyes!
